解答例 1

I would choose Plan A for the following two reasons: The first is a financial one. Even though I want to enjoy my spring break, I don't have that much money. Since the ferry ride costs only 15,000 yen each way, I can spend a little bit more enjoying some of the great local food I have heard so much about on that island. The other reason is that I like traveling by sea, sitting on deck and enjoying the ocean air and view. Saving a few hours by paying more for a plane ride is not for me. (99 words)

解答例 2

I would choose Plan B for two main reasons: One is that I tend to get seasick, and spending long hours each way on the ferry would surely make me sick and unable to enjoy the rest of my vacation. The second reason is that I have heard that the island is a great place to ride a bicycle, and I want to use the extra free time I will gain by flying to the island to explore it by bike and try the different local dishes along the coast. Although a one-way flight costs 30,000 yen, I will gain about an extra five hours! (105 words)

I think one possible effect of the decline of traditional shopping streets in Japan is a loss of a community feeling. People have always been able to meet and talk with others in those old shopping streets and could get information as well as share information with other people. Another effect is the loss of local craftsmanship and traditional businesses. Many craftsmen were there for decades and handed their skills down to their children. This is now being lost. (79 words)
